

To whom it may concern,

If the VEC's in this filing cannot handle a simple morse code test how can they administer any other part. The test requires a cassette player, headphones optional, a prerecorded cassette, paper and pencil. The code test is already written out. The examiner plays the tape and then matches the licensee's message with his master. Morse code at 5 words per minute is not that difficult. It is a skill that has to be learned and it does take time and practice much like anything else in this world. Next they will want golf courses made shorter because they are too lazy to learn how to drive the ball. Morse code is still a viable mode, it is not in the lime light anymore but it is still needed.
